What to Expect From the 2023 Infiniti QX80 Other than Acura's MDX and RDX lineup, there exist another luxury SUV lineup that are both very pricy, but also very luxurious. That's right, Infiniti's QX 80 has been one of the top choices when it comes to luxury SUV for above $60,000 price range. So now that we're getting closer to the release date of the 2023 model, let's talk about what we can expect from it.

What's New? The previous model of QX80 has been known for its lackluster design. Both interior, and exterior. So, the biggest thing that we'll probably see from the 2023 model is of course a complete redesign of the interior and exterior design. Other than that, we'll also most likely a new engine to power up this Infiniti because the one that was used in the previous model have a very abysmal fuel efficiency for its price.

Redesign Exterior I think we can all agree that the previous model of the Infiniti QX80 looks very dated. Which is why we're expecting Infiniti to completely redesign it with completely new looks that are both modern and luxurious. Some of the changes we can expect to see includes an all new paint-job, improved grilles, smaller, more modern headlights, as well as different front and rear fascia.

Interior & Features Despite its luxury price tag it has, the previous model of QX80 has very outdated and incoherent interior design. Both for the infotainment features, and for the general features such as cubbies and storage. We expect Infiniti to rectify this by streamlining their interior design a little more and actually place things where they need to be placed. Because as they are right now in this year's model, it's a hot mess that's very unattractive for buyers. Thankfully there's one good side for the interior of this car though and that is how spacious and comfy it is. Just touch things up a little bit and the 2023 Infiniti QX would've become so much better.

Size & Dimensions Since we're expecting an overhaul of the exterior designs for the car, it's safe to say that the size and dimensions for the upcoming QX80 will differ significantly compared to its predecessor. But still, here are some of the exact measurements of the 2022 QX80, courtesy to Car and Driver: Length – 208' Width – 80' Height – 75' Engine Specs Since the possibility of Infiniti actually changing their powertrain for the 2023 model are pretty slim, we'll most likely see the same exact engine that was used for the 2022 model which is why we're expecting to see a 400-hp 5.6l V-8 powering this luxurious car on the road.

Performance, Fuel Economy & Towing Capacity Despite the seemingly powerful engine the upcoming QX80 will probably have, it has been performing rather lackluster when put in 2022 model. Especially for the price. Overall, we're expecting the 2023 Infiniti QX80 to have a 5.9 seconds 0-to-60 mph test, a very lackluster 14/20 mpg fuel economy for both city and highway driving. But thankfully, if it actually ends up using the same engine as its predecessor, it means that we'll see the excellent towing capacity at 8500 lbs. that we all know and love from the 2022 QX.

Release Date & Price And last but not least for this article on QX80, let's talk about release date and the price that it will have for its base model. Since the 2022 model came out this August in 2021, we can expect the 2023 version to have some similar release date but in 2022 instead if everything goes as expected. This estimate can of course change with how the pandemic is treating everyone so take this estimate with a grain of salt. And lastly for the price itself, Infiniti's QX80 aren't known for their cheap price since they're a luxury SUV. The starting price for this year's model sits at $71,995 which is pretty expensive for an SUV. Due to this, there's almost absolutely no way for the 2023 model to be priced lower than $70,000. In fact, we're expecting it to be priced at $75,000 just for the base model. The price will of course increase as you customize more and more of it and choose different trims for it, but as for the base model price, we're pretty confident in our numbers. Anyway, that about wraps it for this article on Infiniti QX80.

Luxury SUVs are a dime-a-dozen in these days and age, especially with Acura's MDX and RDX series right around the corner. Which means that if Infiniti wants to catch up and earn some goodwill from their loyal customers, they really need to step up their interior and exterior to match the digital age that we live in today. That's all that we can say for now, thank you for reading this one article and definitely let us know what your opinions on the QX80 lineup in general as well as your wishes and hope for its future.
